100,000 Miles Of Coyote Snaring-Mark Steck 3.5 hrs

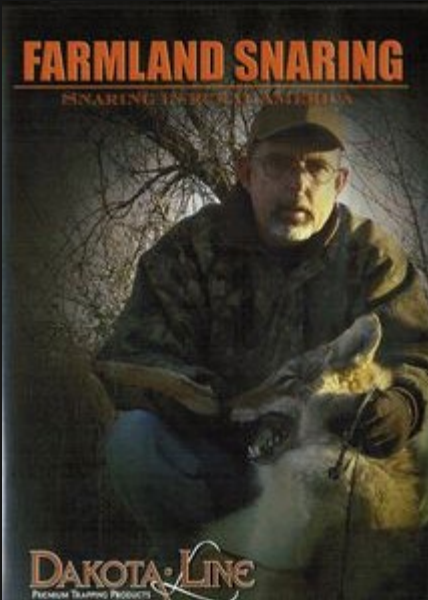

Length: 3 hours 30 minutes

In 1983 I moved to South Dakota because of high canine densities. I've never looked back. Since starting Dakotaline Snares I have worked with many people learning to snare coyotes. I understand the pitfalls and misconceptions that are out there. I have worked on this video for 3 years, because I wanted it done right. My desire is to set a standard for snaring coyotes and for you to be the best “snareman” you can be. Most of this video is filmed on a “working” snareline encompassing several hundred snares. I have trapped and snared coyotes for almost 40 years. I’ve eaten dirt, dust, and skunk essence. I’ve worn out tires, guns and trucks. I’ve been stuck in places I shouldn’t have been. And yet my passion and desire for trapping and snaring canines has never waned. I will chase them until my body says “no more”. Key learning points in the video: Coyote behavior; Coyote travel ways; Keying in on the best locations; Coyote behavior when approaching snares; Snaring on bare ground versus snow. The huge difference? Pushing the envelope on exposed snares; Snaring in farmland and range land; Lethal sets; Locks, cable and making them work to your conditions; Why you should lose some snaring myths right now.
